Senators renewing their appeal for the return of Palestinian women to Gaza: "We have no place here in the West Bank" A large crowd gathered in Gaza City's Al-Shati refugee camp to show solidarity with women in the occupied territories, especially in the West Bank. The rally was organized by the Palestinian Women's Union, which called on the international community to take action to ensure the right of Palestinian women to return to their homes in Gaza.

The rally was attended by thousands of women and their supporters, who chanted slogans calling for the end of the occupation and for the right to return to their homes. The speakers emphasized the importance of women's role in the struggle for freedom and justice, and the need for solidarity with the Palestinian people.

Among the speakers were representatives of various Palestinian women's organizations, as well as activists from other countries. They emphasized the importance of international solidarity and the need for continued support for the Palestinian people.

The rally ended with a march through the streets of Gaza City, with participants carrying signs and banners calling for the return of Palestinian women to their homes in Gaza.

Two Palestinians injured

Two Palestinians were injured in an Israeli airstrike in Gaza City yesterday, according to sources. The airstrike was the latest in a series of attacks on the Palestinian territories by Israel.

According to medical sources, two Palestinians were wounded in the attack, which targeted a residential area in Gaza City.

The Israeli defense ministry said that the attack was in response to rockets fired from Gaza towards Israel.

Politics and violence have escalate in the region, with both sides accusing each other of attacks.

The situation remains tense, with both Israel and Hamas warning of further attacks.

In a statement to AFP yesterday, Hamas' political bureau said, "We are ready to escalate our operations in response to the Israeli aggression.

There have been calls for a truce to be imposed, but both sides have so far refused to do so.

Meanwhile, a Gaza-based group of mediators is working to de-escalate the situation and find a solution to the ongoing conflict.

Strikes kill five fighters in Syria: war monitor

Syria's war has claimed the lives of hundreds of fighters from various factions, including the Islamic State group. According to a war monitor, five fighters were killed in an airstrike in Syria yesterday.

The airstrike targeted a area controlled by the Islamic State group, with an air strike by the US-led coalition.

The monitor said that the airstrike killed five fighters and wounded several others. It added that the airstrike also destroyed several vehicles belonging to the Islamic State group.

The Islamic State group has been a major player in the Syrian war, with its fighters battling government forces and various allies in the conflict.

The group has suffered major setbacks in recent months, with losses in both manpower and territory.

In a separate statement, the US-led coalition said, "We are committed to stopping the Islamic State group and its affiliated organizations in Syria.

The coalition has carried out numerous strikes against the Islamic State group in recent months, with a focus on targeting its fighters and their leaders.

The coalition's efforts have been supported by international military forces, with a focus on the defeat of the Islamic State group in Syria and Iraq.

The coalition's efforts have also been backed by various allies, including Arab and Western countries.

F ormer democracy icon and Nobel Peace Prize laureate Aung San Suu Kyi faces what could be her most serious test on Monday as she prepares to appear before the UN’s highest court, where Myanmar is defending allegations that it committed genocide against the Rohingya Muslim minority.

In a case that could make legal history, Suu Kyi, acting as an ad-hoc minister, will argue that the activities of the military and Buddhist rebels in Myanmar’s Rakhine state did not amount to genocide as defined under international law.

The case will be the first international legal attempt to bring Myanmar to justice over the 2017-2018 violence that saw at least 700,000 Rohingya Muslims flee to Bangladesh to escape a military crackdown that the UN has called a “textbook example” of genocide.

The case is expected to last four months and while outcomes are hard to predict, the court’s decision is certain to shape international legal standards for what constitutes genocide, potentially for centuries to come.

Suu Kyi will be allowed to send written arguments in advance of the trial, which will open in The Hague.

Under international law, a crime of genocide requires a “final solution to the Jewish question” by killing or causing serious harm to entire racial, political or religious groups.

Myanmar is arguing that it did not intend to commit genocide as defined under international law, but did so in self-defense in response to attacks by rebel groups.

Thecase will be the first in which a head of state has appeared before the International Court of Justice, which was set up after World War II to settle disputes between countries.

“I have in my heart the sacred texts of my faith and it will be a form of meditation for me,” Suu Kyi wrote in her final written submission before the trial, delivered to the court on Friday.

The court will decide whether Myanmar committed genocide on the world’s highest legal stage, with its ruling carrying weight in domestic and international law.

The case, which has polarized Myanmar, is expected to cast a long shadow over a country that has moved from political isolation to international pariah status in recent years.

The United Nations human rights chief has described Myanmar as a “paradigm of the slide backwards”.

The trial comes as Suu Kyi’s government comes under increasing pressure to deliver on promises to resolve the Rohingya crisis, after decades of conflict that began in 2016.

The trial will be the first time Suu Kyi has appeared before an international tribunal and is expected to be a key test case for international justice.

The case is a major test of how far international law can go in holding governments to account for serious crimes.

The International Criminal Court, which has jurisdiction over crimes against humanity, war crimes and genocide, has no reach over Myanmar, where Suu Kyi’s government has refused to cooperate.

The trial will begin on Monday, when Suu Kyi is expected to address judges at the world’s highest court.

Myanmar has previously denied allegations it committed the crime of genocide.

The UN’s top human rights body adopted a resolution in December 2018 that Suu Kyi’s government had committed genocide but the Myanmar government has rejected the allegations.

Myanmar is currently embroiled in a crisis over the Rohingya crisis, with the country facing international scrutiny and criticism.

The Rohingya are a Muslim minority in Myanmar’s Rakhine state and they have faced systematic violence and discrimination for decades.

In 2017, Myanmar’s military launched a brutal crackdown on the Rohingya, forcing hundreds of thousands to flee to Bangladesh.

Nearly 200,000 Rohingya have died in the country’s conflict since 2016, with the country facing international condemnation for its role in the violence.

The International Criminal Court has opened an investigation into the situation in Myanmar, but the country has refused to cooperate with the probe.

The trial is expected to last until May and will be broadcast live.

Myanmar has not ratified the International Court of Justice’s compulsory jurisdiction, which means it is not bound by its rulings.

The case is seen as a test of whether the International Court of Justice can hold Myanmar accountable for its actions.

The court’s decision could have implications for other countries facing allegations of genocide, including Myanmar’s neighbors, China and Pakistan.

The Hague-based tribunal set up in 1945 was established to settle disputes between states and to give legal effect to the UN Charter.

The court’s rulings are final and it can order states to pay reparations or take other measures.

The court has 15 judges, all of whom are elected by the UN Security Council and the UN General Assembly.

The court’s seat is shared between the Netherlands and Ireland.

The case will be broadcast live on the International Court of Justice’s website.

The court is expected to deliver its judgment by the beginning of next year.

The trial will be the first in which a head of state has appeared before an international tribunal, with Suu Kyi expected to address judges at the world’s highest court.

Trump says Kim Jong-un risks losing ‘everything’ in Singapore, Trump said yesterday that the North Korean leader, whose country he met twice in 2018, had the right to use military force over any potential threat it perceives. In response, no one of such language would represent ‘the risk of the duration of the war’ that might await the world after the North–South Korea end deadline. “So this is a first round of a rocket launch. We may be watching a rocket being launched in the United States,” he said. The Trump administration had already gone on record that the door for diplomacy remains open. “If the Chinese want to shut it, they can shut it. If they shut it, we will just be watching,” he said.

domestic violence rates fell in parts of Latin America, according to a report by the United Nations, the region’s violence against women is the worst in the world. The report noted that women are more likely to die by violence in Latin America and the Caribbean than in any other region of the world. However, the report also noted that there has been a decrease in incidents of domestic violence in some countries, including Colombia, Guatemala, Haiti, Peru, and Haiti, but the trend is not consistent across the region. The report also highlighted the importance of preventing violence against women and ensuring access to justice and support services for survivors.

Venezuelan migrants face backlash after protests

Bogota

despite recent efforts to improve relations between Venezuela and Colombia, tensions between the two countries have not fully subsided. In fact, relations have become strained in recent weeks, following a series of conflicts between the two nations.

The latest conflict between Venezuela and Colombia escalated on Monday, when a group of Venezuelan migrants tried to cross into Colombia from a border town in Venezuela. The migrants were protesting against the closure of a border crossing, which they claimed was blocking access to a humanitarian aid convoy.

The Venezuelan government has accused Colombia of blocking the aid convoy, which was carrying food, medicine, and other supplies. The Colombian government has denied the charges, saying that the aid convoy was not authorized to enter the country.

De Lima seeks support for people with disabilities

Senior Deputy Senate Leader Leila De Lima urged the government to ensure that people with disabilities (PWDs) are not neglected amid the focus on military operations in the country.

De Lima, in an interview with the Philippine Daily Inquirer, said the PWDs have become “unacceptable sacrifices” amid the military operations in the country.

“PWDs are not just casualties, they are a population that we have to account for,” she said.

De Lima also said that the government should not focus on military operations alone but also on the welfare of PWDs.

Meanwhile, the Department of Social Welfare and Development (DSWD) has likewise called on all stakeholders to ensure that the needs of PWDs are not neglected amid the military operations.

DSWD Secretary William Dar said that the department is working closely with the Department of National Defense (DND) and other government agencies to ensure that the needs of PWDs are met.

Have Metro’s Red, Gold and Green lines will travel!

Touring across Qatar will never be the same again from December 10 when Qatar Rail will launch the first public transport service using the Doha Metro Gold Line for the public. Reaching destination Hamad International Airport, Qatar National Library, Education City Stadium, Khalifa International Airport, Al Wakra Stadium in Al Wakra, Hamad Hospital, City Center Doha, Villagio, and Mall of Qatar is going to be a breeze. Forget traffic jams, searching for parking or paying for parking.

The occasion also coincides with the opening of four more stations on the Red Line - Hamad International Airport, Katara, Qatar University and Lusail, according to Qatar Rail. With this, “test operations” on the first three Metro lines will have been conducted according to the Ministry of Transport and Communications (MoTC). Earlier, Qatar Rail had tested services on the Gold Line on November 21, while the Red Line was opened on May 8 this year.

The Green Line runs from Al Mansoura to Al Bidda and comprises a total of 18 stations. The other stations are Msheireb (interchange), Al Bidda (interchange), The White Palace, Hamad Hospital, Al Meisail, Al Rayyan Al Gadeem, Al Shahaj, Qatar National Library and Education City. Like the Red and Gold lines, the Green Line will operate from 6am-11pm Thursday-Sunday, and from 11am-1pm Fridays. Metrolink feeder bus services will also be available during these timings to connect the metro stations with the other metro stations and areas near them, according to the MoTC. The routes can be found on the Qatar Rail website. Passengers using the Green Line can use any of the two interchange stations, Msheireb and Al Bidda, to switch over to other lines. While Msheireb serves an as interchange station for all three lines (Red, Gold and Green), Al Bidda is an interchange station for the Red and Green lines.

People in Qatar can already access two other 2022 World Cup venues, Khalifa International Stadium in Doha and Al Janoub Stadium in Al Wakra, using Doha Metro’s Gold and Red lines, respectively.

What makes travel by Doha Metro most attractive is the perfectly affordable fare. A Day Pass for all lines costs QR6, while a single trip costs QR2 in the gold class, and QR10 in the gold class. The Green and Gold lines cost QR6, while a single trip costs QR2 in the gold class. For parking.

"It would be better if there was another gas leak which would kill all and save us all, "one of the residents of the neighbourhhood, or east of Bisch, said after just minutes away from the chemical warehouse and just before midnight on 2 December 1984 and moved into the first from that moment. The chemical warehouse plant still is untouched behind the factory wall.

The resort of 16 Flager have been set up on the premises. The chemical factory, which was touched by the toxic gas, has been touched by the toxic gas, has been untouched by the toxic gas. Ever since the first standard and family class, and QR10 in the gold class.
