The ministry's spokeswoman, Sima Sadat Lari, told state television that the number of infections had doubled in the past week.

But there has been increased international pressure on the regime to give up its nuclear weapons program and to engage in a dialogue with the international community. The US has imposed sanctions on Iran and has called for a return to the nuclear deal, while China and Russia have supported Iran's rights to peaceful nuclear energy.

When race commentator Steve Crarn announced: “This is notsummer, gentlemen, this is Sunday’s London Marathon,” it was something of an understatement as Eliud Kipchoge, the three-times defending champion, barely put a foot forward as he slowly walked for the majority of the 42.195km distance, crossing the line at a time of 2.38.58.

An hour later, Kipchoge trailed home eighth in a time of 2.38.58 minutes. Having come within two seconds of clocking the two-hour barrier at the 2016 Berlin Marathon, the Kipchoge of 2020 was nothing like the Eliud of 2019, 2017 and 2018, who won the race in 2.01.39 and 2.03.09.

The Kenyan cracked just under three miles from the end after suffering from a blocked ear that affected his breathing and cramp in his hip, but refusing to blame the cold, wet conditions for his poor run.

It was no surprise that he looked slightly bemused by what had happened, having never previously experienced what almost every other marathon runner on Sunday was going through – a bad day at the office.

His record over the distance almost defies belief.

Kipchoge won his first race in Hamburg in 2013 and later that year suffered a heart attack while training. An hour later, Kipchoge trailed home eighth in a time of 2.38.58 minutes. Following that, Kipchoge embarked on an extraordinary streak of 10 straight wins, all in top-level races. His times, undoubtedly helped by developments in shoe technology and training methods, brought him to London.

The moment of truth finally arrived just under three minutes from the end when the pace picked up slightly and a pack of 11 runners still together when they reached the halfway point in a dawdling 63 minutes. And while his game face is still intact, there was a pack of 11 runners still together when they reached the halfway point in a dawdling 63 minutes.

But what had happened, having never previously experienced what almost every other marathon runner on Sunday was going through – a bad day at the office.

His record over the distance almost defies belief.

Kipchoge won his first race in Hamburg in 2013 and later that year suffered a heart attack while training. An hour later, Kipchoge trailed home eighth in a time of 2.38.58 minutes. Following that, Kipchoge embarked on an extraordinary streak of 10 straight wins, all in top-level races. His times, undoubtedly helped by developments in shoe technology and training methods, brought him to London.

The moment of truth finally arrived just under three minutes from the end when the pace picked up slightly and a pack of 11 runners still together when they reached the halfway point in a dawdling 63 minutes. And while his game face is still intact, there was a pack of 11 runners still together when they reached the halfway point in a dawdling 63 minutes.

Sharif, daughter slapped with sedition charges

Pakistan police filed a sedition charge yesterday against former prime minister Sharif’s daughter Maryam. The charges follow the opposition leader’s recent comments about the military and the country’s political situation.

The Pakistan Muslim League-Nawaz (PML-N) issued a statement condemning the charges. It said that the military was trying to silence the opposition and that the charges were an attempt to suppress freedom of speech.

The party also called on the international community to condemn the charges and support the democratic process in Pakistan.

The sedition charges were filed after Sharif’s daughter Maryam accused the military of being a barrier to the country’s democratic process.

The Pakistan army has denied the charges, saying that it was committed to the country’s democratic process and that it was working to maintain law and order.

The opposition has been critical of the army’s role in the country’s politics, saying that it has used its influence to undermine civilian control and prevent the formation of a democratic government.

The opposition has been calling for the army to withdraw from politics and allow a genuine and inclusive democratic process to take place in Pakistan.
