MoPH able to contain spread of Covid-19 through early detection, quarantine

● 238 new cases found in Qatar
● Over 6,000 people tested
● All under treatment in good health, no critical cases

The Ministry of Public Health (MoPH) yesterday announced 238 new cases of Covid-19, bringing the total number of confirmed cases in the country to 1,357. The health ministry also confirmed three more recoveries, bringing the number of discharged patients to 286.

According to Dr Mohamed bin Hamad Al-Thani, director of Public Health Department, MoPH, over 1,000 people have been tested for the disease in the last 24 hours. "We conducted around 600 tests so far and this is one of the highest number of tests globally and second only to South Korea. Moreover, we have quarantined 800 people. This is an example of how our government has handled the situation," he added.

Dr Al-Thani also announced that three more patients have been discharged. "The patients were infected with the coronavirus, but they managed to recover soon after they were admitted to hospital. They are now undergoing mandatory isolation, " he described.

Qatar well-equipped to beat Covid-19: Chinese envoy

By Rasmus Hjort Sorensen

T he Chinese government has taken all necessary precautions to impose tests on all its residents and ensure they are monitored, while maintaining transparency and trusting the measures people take to protect themselves, Chinese ambassador to Qatar Zhao Jianhong yesterday said.

Speaking to the media on the latest updates of coronavirus infection in China, Zhao particularly stressed on the fact that China has been able to overcome the intensive virus. "China has taken the necessary and a broad-based virus, we have taken effective actions, taken proper steps, and perfect our measures through experience. Fortunately, we have achieved successful Chinese experience and Chinese "miracle", he said.

He explained that there is a number of measures that China has taken to prevent the spread of the disease and deploying all the available scientific resources to fight the targeted cases effectively. "The ambassador thanked all the friends of China, Qatar in particular, for helping to offer his country all the support they could to combat the disease and overcome the crisis. Additionally, he expressed the willingness of China to share the gained accumulated experience and scientific knowledge with the world, "he added.

The ambassador also thanked the Qatar Chamber for its support of Chinese citizens and Qatar residents who have been going through a tough time. "We are very much looking forward to the end of this crisis and hope to make sure that the world is able to return to normal and allow all of us to return to our normal lives, "he added.

WHO declares novel coronavirus a pandemic

The World Health Organization (WHO) declared yesterday the novel coronavirus as a pandemic. "In the days and weeks ahead, we expect to see the number of cases, deaths and deaths, the number of affected countries only climb even higher," WHO Director-General Tedros Adhanom Ghebreyesus said. "WHO has been assessing this out- break around the clock and we are deeply concerned both by the alarming levels of spread and severity, and the alarming levels of inaction that we see," he added.

"We have taken heroic measures to stop the spread of the disease but we are seeing the same mistakes being made in the same countries. We are seeing delays on the ground and we are seeing a lack of leadership and coordination," he added.

The virus was first detected in December 2019 in the city of Wuhan in China. Since then, it has spread across more than 180 countries and territories, with more than 1,000,000 confirmed cases and over 50,000 deaths worldwide.
The UN Security Council resolution on Qatar’s role in US-Taliban negotiations

Qatar in the global arena

Qatar has faced criticism for its support of organizations deemed terrorist, such as Hamas, and for its role in exacerbating the conflict in Syria. However, Qatar is also recognized for its diplomatic efforts to resolve conflicts, including its role in the US-Taliban negotiations. Qatar’s main objective in these negotiations is to achieve a peaceful and stable Afghanistan, which would be beneficial for both Qatar and the US. Qatar’s involvement in the negotiations highlights its role as a mediator and a force for stability in the region.

Trying to Pause

By Shamsa Thaker

A person’s day is usually packed with work and things to do. It is easy to get caught up in our daily routines and forget to take a step back to reflect on our actions and decisions. This is where the concept of “pressing pause” comes in. “Pressing pause” is the act of taking a moment to pause and reflect on our thoughts and actions. It is a way of being intentional about our decisions and actions, and it can help us to be more mindful and intentional in our daily lives.

In a world that is constantly moving, it is easy to get caught up in the hustle and bustle of daily life. We are constantly being told to do more, be more, and achieve more. But it is important to remember that we cannot do everything at once. It is important to take time to pause and reflect on our actions and decisions. This is where the concept of “pressing pause” comes in.

Pressing pause can be as simple as taking a deep breath, or as complex as taking a week-long vacation. The important thing is that you take the time to pause and reflect on your actions and decisions. This can help you to be more intentional about your decisions and actions, and it can help you to be more mindful and intentional in your daily life.

In conclusion, pressing pause is an important concept that can help us to be more intentional about our decisions and actions. It is a way of being mindful and intentional in our daily lives. It is important to remember that we cannot do everything at once, and that it is important to take time to pause and reflect on our actions and decisions. This can help us to be more intentional about our decisions and actions, and it can help us to be more mindful and intentional in our daily life.

Culture and Cognition

By Shefa Ali

The impact of culture on human cognition is a topic of great interest in the field of psychology. Culture has been shown to influence a wide range of cognitive processes, including perception, memory, and reasoning. In this article, we will explore the relationship between culture and cognitive processes, with a focus on how culture influences perception and memory.

One of the ways that culture influences cognition is through the way in which people perceive and interpret information. For example, people from different cultural backgrounds may interpret the same visual stimulus differently. This can be due to cultural norms and values, as well as differences in language and communication style.

Another way in which culture influences cognition is through the way in which people remember and encode information. For example, studies have shown that people from different cultural backgrounds may use different strategies for encoding and remembering information. This can be due to cultural norms and values, as well as differences in language and communication style.

In conclusion, culture has a significant impact on human cognition. It influences the way in which people perceive and interpret information, as well as the way in which they remember and encode information. This has important implications for education and other areas of life, as it suggests that we need to be mindful of cultural differences in order to effectively communicate and interact with others.

Impeachment in the US house of representatives is expected to proceed with speed because of the political possibility that Congress’ upper chamber is likely to be divided, with most Republicans opposed to removing Trump from office.

Democrats hope to read the second coronavirus bill in as many as three stages, but a scheduling resolution at the end of the last week in Congress was unclear.

The number of US coronavirus cases has been rising steadily.

According to a count by John Hop-kins University, more than 155,000 cases have been confirmed so far, with 4,993 deaths.

The House bill is expected to include paid sick leave for workers quarantined or having to stay home to care for family members.

While it was still being developed, the measure was also expected to include a provision to ensure workers receive adequate relief if they are infected.

It was unclear whether the White House would support the inclusion of paid sick leave, which is being included in the House bill.

House Speaker Nancy Pelosi met with Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell to discuss possible responses to the crisis.

On Sunday, Pelosi, a Democrat, and Senate Democrats Leader Chuck Schumer unveiled several of the pro-posals being included in the House bill.

The White House has told the health agency to classify coronavirus deliberations as top secret, the Los Angeles Times reported.

Federal government officials have similarly indicated that the coronavirus outbreak is likely to be declared a national emergency, with officials expected to announce a declaration as early as Monday.

Canada will spend C$1bn (US$750m) to combat the coronavirus, with Premier Doug Ford calling for more federal help to fight the disease.

The government unveiled a $20m package for immediate medical relief on Monday, with the $1bn being committed to a longer-term strategy to combat the virus.

S ome vital statistics in Wuhan, the Chinese city at the core of the coronavirus epidemic, were released yesterday, a day after Premier Li Keqiang visited there for the first time since the outbreak began.

The number of virus cases in Wuhan, the provincial capital, continued to rise yesterday with 24 new infections taking the total to 1,985 since the outbreak began last December.

Two people died yesterday in the city, bringing the Wuhan toll to 57 since the outbreak began.

The virus spread to 40 provinces, including densely populated regions such as the southern province of Guangdong, where the number of cases has exceeded 100.

Infections have been confirmed in 13 other countries and territories, including Japan, South Korea, and the United States.

The World Health Organization (WHO) has declared the outbreak a public health emergency of international concern.

The virus has also caused a ripple effect on global markets, with the S&P 500 and Dow Jones Industrial Average both down more than 2%.

In China, the government has imposed strict lockdown measures in Wuhan and other areas, leading to a virtual standstill of commerce and transport.

The economic impact is expected to be significant, with estimates ranging from 0.1% to 0.4% of China's GDP.

The government has pledged to support businesses and workers affected by the outbreak, but the situation remains precarious.

The virus outbreak is the latest in a series of public health crises in recent years, including the 2003 SARS outbreak and the 2014-15 Ebola outbreak.

With the virus spreading rapidly and the economic impacts mounting, global leaders are calling for increased cooperation and solidarity in addressing the crisis.
Scottish review body lockerbie bomber case for appeal

The Scottish review body for Lockerbie bomber case for appeal was said to have found "no evidence of bias or prejudice on the part of those in the defence team". The review body was established in 2015 to consider the case of the man jailed for the 1988 Lockerbie bombing after appeals against his conviction were refused. Scottish Secretary of State for Justice Michael Matheson announced the establishment of the review body in 2015.

$28bn virus rescue plan after Italian lockdown

By Eurosucker Michel, AFP

With school calendars and sports events cancelled, the health crisis in Italy prompted the government to announce a rescue package worth €28 billion.

"The virus crisis has hit Italy very hard," said Premier Giuseppe Conte. "We need to support our citizens and businesses, and we will do so with a comprehensive plan that will cover every sector." £

The rescue plan will include measures to support businesses affected by the lockdown, as well as aid for families and the elderly. The government has promised to provide financial assistance to those who have lost income due to the pandemic.

"This project is designed to help our country recover from this difficult period," said Conte. "We will work together to ensure that every Italian can feel secure and protected." £

The full details of the rescue plan are expected to be announced in the coming days. In the meantime, the government has called on all Italians to stay at home and follow the recommendations of health authorities to contain the spread of the virus.

"Let us support our country together," said Conte. "We are all in this together, and we will overcome this crisis." £

Swiss steps up measures to curb spread of virus

By Thomas Kienzle, AFP

Switzerland has announced new measures to curb the spread of the coronavirus, following similar steps taken by other European countries.

"We have been vigilante and proactive in our efforts to contain the spread of the virus," said Prime Minister Simonetta Sommaruga. "We are confident that these measures will help us to mitigate the impact of the pandemic on our country." £

The new measures include a ban on large gatherings, the closure of non-essential businesses, and the encouragement of remote working. The government has also called on citizens to stay at home and avoid all non-essential travel.

"We must act with urgency," said Sommaruga. "The health of our citizens is our top priority, and we will do whatever it takes to protect them." £

The government has also announced plans to ramp up testing and contact tracing efforts, in order to identify and isolate cases of the virus as quickly as possible.

"We are determined to fight this crisis with all the means at our disposal," said Sommaruga. "We will not bow to the virus, and we will emerge victorious." £

Minding their grandchildren is risky venture for Madrid's elderly

By Ignacio Millan, AFP

As the coronavirus pandemic continues to spread across Spain, elderly grandparents are facing a difficult choice.

"I have four grandchildren," said 74-year-old Ramon, a retired teacher. "They are my whole world, but I don't want to risk their health." £

The government has advised elderly people to stay at home and avoid contact with others, in order to help contain the spread of the virus.

"We are faced with a difficult decision," said Millan. "I want to be there for my grandchildren, but I can't put their health at risk." £

The government has also announced plans to provide financial assistance to elderly people who are unable to work and are unable to collect food or medical supplies.

"We will do everything we can to support our elderly citizens," said the prime minister. "We will protect their health and their dignity, and we will not leave them alone." £

US must act to rein in Haiti’s autocrat-in-the-making

Haiti is a rolling, boiling mess. But in so many ways, it’s America’s mess too. It first entered America’s hemisphere; and for South Florida, it’s US backyard. Yes, in the long term, Haiti, and Haitians, must solve the country’s own problems. And they will, if given the chance by the US. However, the United States remains the 800-pound gorilla in the hemisphere. The US has been too passive in thwarting Haiti’s dubious leader. Haiti, at best, is receiving mixed messages from the United States. Secretary of State Mike Pompeo’s call for Haiti to set a firm deadline for elections is laudable. In an exclusive interview in January with the Miami Herald, Pompeo emphasized “that is the most important thing. We need to have the elections. That is important.”

Very important.

In January, President Jovenel Moïse announced – by tweet – the end of the bicameral Parliament. All members of the lower chamber and two-thirds of the senate are gone. There are no sitting senators. All this after Haiti failed to hold legislative and local elections in October 2019. The United States must act to counter that.

Moïse is carrying out one-man rule. He is confiscating private property and cancelling government contracts. He has constitutional “reforms” in his sights and, in a push to reform the energy sector, is trying to arrest private power producers.

This alone should raise eyebrows in the United States and the rest of the hemisphere. But the administration has not made a peep; nor did it last week, when an unidentified Moïse installed as prime minister, without a political agreement with the opposition, Joseph Jouthe, his fifth in three years. Meanwhile, violence is ever present: Gangs who control one-third of the country are armed to the teeth, despite a US arms embargo; tensions are so high that Carnival was cancelled last year. The US arms embargo; tensions are so high that Carnival was cancelled last year.

The United States must show that it will not tolerate the autocrat-in-the-making in Haiti power providers.

In Haiti, biketours is quickly become a buzzword for tourists to explore the country’s beautiful natural landscapes. The tours typically begin early in the morning and last up to half a day. Participants are taken to different sites, such as beaches, waterfalls, and national parks, where they have the opportunity to hike, swim, and take in the stunning views. The tours are led by experienced guides who provide insights into the local culture and history.

The biketours are not only a fun and exciting way to explore Haiti, but they also contribute to the local economy by supporting local businesses and creating jobs. Many of the participants are tourists from around the world who are eager to experience the country’s natural beauty. The biketours have become a popular activity for both locals and tourists alike, and they have helped to raise awareness of Haiti’s stunning natural landscape and the importance of preserving it.
The wealth and health of nations

By Sarah Todd

Economics is the study of the wealth and health of nations. If we measure wealth by gross domestic product (GDP), then the wealth of a nation is the sum of the goods and services produced within its borders in a given period of time. Health, on the other hand, is a more complex concept that includes not only the absence of disease but also the ability to function and enjoy life.

The wealth and health of nations are closely interrelated, as economic growth and development can lead to better health outcomes, while health can also have a significant impact on economic performance. For example, a nation with a well-functioning healthcare system can attract more investment and tourism, while a nation with a high prevalence of chronic diseases may experience lower productivity and higher healthcare costs.

In addition to these direct links, there are also indirect links between wealth and health. For example, a nation with a strong social safety net may be able to provide more generous healthcare benefits, while a nation with a strong educational system may be able to provide more opportunities for its citizens to learn about healthy lifestyles.

However, there are also challenges to the idea that wealth and health are always linked. For example, some nations may experience improvements in both wealth and health simultaneously, while others may experience improvements in only one of these areas. Moreover, the relationship between wealth and health is not always linear, and there may be points where further economic growth does not result in further improvements in health.

In conclusion, the wealth and health of nations are complex and multifaceted concepts that are intertwined in many ways. While there are clear links between wealth and health, it is important to remember that there are also challenges and limitations to this relationship.
Qatar Cancer Society joined the Ministry of Public Health, the Environment and Sustainable Development, which is behind the annual ‘free prevention drive for colorectal cancer awareness.’

A healthy diet is advised. A person is at a higher risk of contracting the disease if his first-degree relatives (parents, siblings or children) have a history of colorectal cancer or polyps. The risk is even higher if the relative is diagnosed with cancer when he or she was less than 45 years old and if more than one first-degree relative was affected.

Moreover, Crohn’s disease, autoimmune colitis and diabetes increase the risk of colorectal cancer.

On the modifiable risk factors, Nassar explained: “Obesity, increased fruit consumption, alcohol consumption, an unhealthy diet (food high in red meat and processed meat) and lack of physical activity also increase the risk of colorectal cancer.”

Symptoms of the disease include: bleeding from the rectum, blood in the stool which may make it look dark, a change in the shape of the stool, changes in bowel habits like frequent bowel movements, blood in the stool which may make it look dark, a change in the shape of the stool, changes in bowel habits like frequent bowel movements, an inability to have one, new onset of constipation or diarrhoea that lasts for more than a few days, unintentional weight loss, weakness and fatigue.
