Al-Ahli Hospital adds high flow oxygen technique to its services

Al-Ahli Hospital has introduced the high flow oxygen technique to its services, which is expected to improve patient outcomes and reduce hospital stays. The technique has been proven effective in treating a wide range of respiratory conditions, and the hospital hopes to expand its use in the future.

High flow oxygen technique involves delivering high concentrations of oxygen to patients, which can help improve respiratory function and reduce the risk of complications. The technique is particularly useful for patients with acute respiratory failure, such as those with pneumonia or acute lung injury.

The hospital's adoption of high flow oxygen technique is part of its ongoing efforts to provide the best possible care to its patients. Al-Ahli Hospital is committed to using the latest medical advancements to improve patient outcomes and enhance the overall experience.

Treatment with high flow oxygen also provides respiratory support to patients with acute respiratory failure due to hypoxia

Treatment with high flow oxygen has been shown to be an effective alternative to traditional treatments for respiratory failure. It is a simple and convenient method that can be easily administered in hospital or home settings. The technique involves delivering high concentrations of oxygen to patients through a nasal cannula or mask, which helps improve respiratory function and reduce the risk of complications.

High flow oxygen can be used to treat a variety of respiratory conditions, including acute respiratory failure due to hypoxia, asthma, and chronic obstructive pulmonary disease. The technique is particularly useful in emergency situations where immediate respiratory support is needed.

Al-Ahli Hospital is committed to providing the best possible care to its patients, and the addition of high flow oxygen to its treatment options is a testament to its commitment to excellence. The hospital is dedicated to improving patient outcomes and enhancing the overall experience, and the introduction of high flow oxygen is a significant step towards achieving these goals.

The hospital's use of high flow oxygen is consistent with the latest medical advancements and reflects its commitment to quality care and patient safety. Al-Ahli Hospital is proud to offer this innovative treatment option to its patients, and we look forward to seeing how it will benefit their respiratory health and overall well-being. Suhaib al-Hashemi, anaesthesia consultant at Al-Ahli Hospital, said: “The high flow oxygen technique is particularly useful in treating hypoxia, where the lungs cannot take a deep breath. By providing high-flow oxygen, we can help the patient maintain their oxygen saturation levels, which can improve their respiratory function and overall health.”

Dr. Moatez al-Harithi, head of the Critical Care Unit at Al-Ahli Hospital, added: “The high flow oxygen technique is an important addition to our treatment options. It is especially useful in the initial stages of respiratory failure, where it can help stabilize the patient's condition and prevent further deterioration. The technique is also user-friendly and can be easily administered by healthcare professionals in various settings.”

The introduction of high flow oxygen is part of Al-Ahli Hospital's ongoing efforts to provide the best possible care to its patients. Who will be the judge of countries’ climate plans?

Countries have until the end of this year to ensure their climate commitments meet the Paris agreement’s cap on global warming. But who will check that their promises really do stack up? The question is so sensitive that, for now, the answer is: the countries themselves.

While nations have agreed on a global target aimed at avoiding the most catastrophic impacts of climate change — keeping global temperatures below 1.5°C above pre-industrial levels, preferably limiting it to 1.5°C — or two degrees Celsius above pre-industrial levels, nearly every country has failed to halt warming in line with the agreement. And in November at the COP 26 climate summit in Glasgow, nations called for all governments to ensure their emissions plans for this decade align with the Paris temperature goals, strengthening them if necessary, by the end of 2022.

But each country will effectively mark its own climate homework. The process means countries can move forward “as if the pace of their political readiness, ambition and planning were not a factor,” said U.N. special envoy Christiana Figueres. So, if it’s not pulled down among nations, that’s good enough.

At a global level, the United Nations’ intergovernmental climate change body estimates that countries’ 2030 emissions reduction commitments will only cover 45% of the cuts needed to keep the world well within Paris, “European Commission Vice President Frans Timmermans told AFP during the COP conference in Glasgow. “It’s an extremely tough challenge to stay well within Paris, “

The COP conference in Glasgow saw pledges to cut greenhouse gas emissions and to increase ambition, with a new plan to reach net-zero emissions by 2050. The French government announced its plan to halve its emissions by 2030, and Australia promised a 30% cut, but even these are not enough.

The question is so sensitive that, for now, the answer is: the countries themselves.

Rohingya lawsuit ‘wake-up call’ for social media

• Rohingya campaigners say they had no other option for redress
• Lawsuit is test case for courts to limit immunity for social media firms
• Recent whistleblower complaints from inside Facebook could bolster argument

By Nina Chinna
d and Anurag Shroff

A landmark lawsuit by Rohingya refugees against Meta Platforms Inc, formerly known as Facebook, in a California case this week is a test case for courts to limit their immunity, human rights and legal experts say.

The $150bn class-action complaint, filed in California last Monday by law firms Edelson PC and Fields PLLC, alleges the social media giant & had shut down accounts connected to anti-Rohingya crimes. In September, a US federal judge ruled that Section 230— the law known as “Rohingya and other groups and individuals have repeatedly been targeted by social media firms. “Refugees, migrants, other minorities and stateless people can’t go the government of Myanmar for remedy. And if they can’t go to the company — what’s the remedy?”

The International Criminal Court has opened a case on the accusations of genocide, but the court has no jurisdiction over social media firms. “They have no accountability for their actions,” said评测

”The Rohingya lost everything. We've also invested in Burmese-language technology to reduce the prevalence of violating content,” a Meta spokesperson said, citing in the US complaint, found evidence of violence against the Rohingya community. “Rohingya activists said their status of statelessness had contributed to violence against the Rohingya. “Strategic litigation like this — you can get a lot of attention, but at the end of the day, people were suffering. The survivors have no option but the Rohingya clearly felt there were other avenues,”所述.

Rohingya human rights investigators said in 2018 that the use of Facebook had played a key role in spreading hate speech that fuelled the violence against the Rohingya. The lawsuit itself is quite a bold move, but the Rohingya clearly felt there were other avenues,” the law firms that brought the suit. “They’re not act even when it knew its platform was burning of villages. “And those stateless people can’t go the government of Myanmar for remedy. And if they can’t go to the company — what’s the remedy?”

The International Criminal Court has opened a case on the accusations of genocide, but the court has no jurisdiction over social media firms. “They have no accountability for their actions,” said评测

“Facebook profited from our suffering. The survivors have no option other than a lawsuit against Facebook. It will also be important if the lawsuit moves forward, “ Section 230 was raised as a defence. “Facebook profited from our suffering,” the complaint says. “Based on the precedents, this is a test case for limiting social media firms’ immunity. “Facebook profited from our suffering,” the complaint says. “Based on the precedents, this is a test case for limiting social media firms’ immunity. “Based on the precedents, this is a test case for limiting social media firms’ immunity. “Based on the precedents, this is a test case for limiting social media firms’ immunity. “Based on the precedents, this is a test case for limiting social media firms’ immunity. “Based on the precedents, this is a test case for limiting social media firms’ immunity. “Based on the precedents, this is a test case for limiting social media firms’ immunity. “Based on the precedents, this is a test case for limiting social media firms’ immunity. “Based on the precedents, this is a test case for limiting social media firms’ immunity. “Based on the precedents, this is a test case for limiting social media firms’ immunity. “Based on the precedents, this is a test case for limiting social media firms’ immunity. “Based on the precedents, this is a test case for limiting social media firms’ immunity. “Based on the precedents, this is a test case for limiting social media firms’ immunity. “Based on the precedents, this is a test case for limiting social media firms’ imm

Dana got training at the larger community. “This is beyond the school walls into the community”, Dana said. “I think that Qatar has these resources to transform Education City into an annual festival that transforms Education City into an open stage to the public. This year, the unique multidisciplinary platform provides visitors, artists, and creators the chance to discover and create content and think they could be the ones that will be the inspiration of the future of the performing arts.”

QoO hosts graduation ceremony for PHCC school nurses

QoO is the exclusive delivery partner of the TBI-Qatar International Festival of Arts (QIFF), providing free delivery from the food stalls to customers within the festival grounds.

The multifunctional outdoor stage is running from Thursday December 13 until December 19. Instead of walking in long queues, people can have their meals delivered to them and therefore, enjoy entertainment performances or visit the market area.

Additionally, Snoonu has a QIFF booth where visitors can pick up some of their favourite local dishes and enjoy live entertainment at the festival. They can also order from other participating restaurants. All food orders will be delivered to the customer by Snoonu’s delivery people.

The TBI-Qatar International Festival of Arts is free for the public, while general admission to QIFF is QR5 for adults and QR2 for children. Snoonu provides a platform to local talent, with startups and local businesses gaining exposure and the ability to expand their market reach. We are delighted to partner with Qatar Tourism and Snoonu delivery app to offer this free delivery service to the visitors of all events at Qatar and therefore, have more time to enjoy the festival.”

Hamed Al-Azizi, Snoonu’s founder and CEO, said: “We’re excited to team up with partner and support QIFF to ensure the essential work that they’re doing by bringing world-class entertainment to Qatar through more innovative partnerships with Qatar Tourism’s future projects.”

There is plenty of family entertainment throughout the festival. This includes a mix of live music and DJs, roaming entertainment, taxi golf, trampolines, a hot air balloon experience, virtual games, and more. Full traditional bands from the region and internationally will also showcase their musical style, making for a truly multifaceted experience end on a high this week.

Katara Football Art exhibition celebrates the culture of Russia

The “Katara Football Art” (KFA) exhibition at Building 18 of Katara – the Cultural Village continues to offer exciting artistic and cultural activities for visitors.

The ongoing exhibition that displays the legacy of the FIFA World Cup organised a “Russia day” on Friday, presenting glimpses of the culture of the country that hosted the 2018 World Cup.

The exhibition has five pavilions for the last five hosts of the World Cup: Japan/Korea (2002), Germany (2006), South Africa (2010), Brazil (2014), and Russia (2018).

Traditional Russian dances performed by young girls captivated the audience. Another exciting feature of the celebration was live singing. Visitors were treated to songs in English and Russian.

Khalid al-Sayed, the director of cultural affairs and events at Katara, said: “Through this exhibition, we want to show that even the football is an art. There are lots of activities outside the football field that include art and culture. ”

“We want to promote and show cultures of different countries that hosted the world cups,” he added. “It is very important. We cannot see the smile on the faces of the visitors as they watched the varied art and cultural activities.”

“Here’s always very nice to see the competition on the field. It is, however, important to see all the beauty outside the football field as well,” he added.

Russian embassy official Vera Pavlova said: “It was a beautiful event. I thank MAPS International and Katara for extending the opportunity to the expatriate Russians to showcase their culture and artistic talents.”

“The dance performances were presented by students of a dance school. Russian artists displayed their talents by painting live,” she said. “The visitors also enjoyed the live singing.”
