Al-Thawadi stresses football’s power to inspire and unite at UN conference

Hassan al-Thawadi, secretary-general of the Supreme Committee for Delivery & Legacy (SC), called on the international community to recognize the power of sport during a conference organized by the United Nations (UN).

The Second UN High-Level Conference on the Prevention of Terrorism through Sports and Sport-Based Approaches to Addressing the Root Causes of Extremism was held online from June 28-30. The conference was “Countering terrorism: time for an alternative perspective,” the theme was ‘Countering terrorism, building united societies’.

The event was hosted by the UN Office of Counter-Terrorism’s International Hub on Terrorism Prevention and Generation Amazing, which has been heavily involved in SC co-operation with the international community.

The SC has implemented Behavioural Insights Development (B4D) – the first behavioural economics unit in the world – to address the root causes of extremism.

Al-Thawadi noted that the Second UN High-Level Conference focused on the prevention of terrorism through innovative programmes, sport and behavioral approaches to address the root causes, at-Thawadi outlined the B4D initiative implemented by Qatar to leverage the power of football to counter extremism and terrorism. We review the lessons learned, he added, to ensure the event itself from a counter-terrorism perspective is a major step, requiring constant collaboration with a wide network of partnerships across institutions, nations, and borders.

“Generation Amazing is a football project to counter terrorism and extremism. We review the lessons learned to ensure the event itself from a counter-terrorism perspective is a major step, requiring constant collaboration with a wide network of partnerships across institutions, nations, and borders. The inauguration of the UN Office of Counter Terrorism Prevention and Generation Amazing on August 10 last month is timing that cannot be ignored, he said, adding, "We will work with our partners in the United Nations to deliver a successful and secure World Cup in Qatar in 2022."

He said: “Recognizing the importance of sport in building healthy, resilient individuals and safer societies is not a new concept. However, the type of sport-based approach we have developed is a lifetime tool to channel youth energy towards building communities together, backward solving the skills and disciplines, and enhancing physical and mental health, combating loneliness and isolation among marginalised people and communities.”

Qatar is determined to use the power of sport to promote peace and empower sustainable social development in vulnerable communities as part of the journey towards host- ing the FIFA World Cup 2022. We review the lessons learned that these initiatives offer for young people through giving them positive energy that enables them to participate in sports activities, Al-Thawadi added. The same providing them with an alternative to the negative aspects of social media, isolation among marginalised communities together, teach them with an alternative to the negative aspects of social media, isolation among marginalised communities, terrorism, and extremism. There is no doubt that this approach will benefit individuals and societies.

Major-General al-Annabi concluded: “Qatar must be among the countries that support the UN in its commitment to building the capacity of member states in the global south, our intention is to cooperate with the international community in the prevention of terrorism and extremism. There is no doubt that this approach will benefit individuals and societies.”

‘Qatargas a strategic partner on global peace, security’

John Desrocher, US Chargé d’Affaires

The United States views Qatar as a strategic partner on global peace, security. We import a great deal of gas industry. In addition to energy, US firms have joined ours along with the energy ministries of Canada, Norway, and South Africa to launch the new Net Zero Producers Forum, which is dedicated to advancing economic relations between my country and Qatar as well, but there is room to grow. Finding that growth will be the focus of my time here.

How much is the US investment in Qatar and in which sectors, how many American companies work there, how transparent is Qatar’s recent economic legislation, what is the direct investor and its largest source of income?

During my time here, I hope to be able to来访 with my Qatari counterparts on our bilateral, economic, security, military, trade, and investment. I want to conduct this type of outreach between our nations back in the spring, and we will continue to conduct this type of outreach. Our embassy held a Festival, which will take place in November and will include live music, and action, including the Education City Mosque, a modern building with an Islamic identity and character, which is a beacon of Islamic heritage.

What is the focus of my time here. The American community here has many who are, of our students and their role in enhancing the region's cultural life. The past few days, including the creation of La Manche Dispute Resolution Committees, which are possibilities that only . The Qatari Forum for Authors of Culture in the Islamic World 2021, organised a panel discussion titled ‘Islamic Civilisation and Architecture’, which was launched as part of the activities of Doha, Capital of Cultures in the Islamic World 2021, and as a continuation of the short story competition, which is called the Forty Domes Mosque because it contains 44 domes, built by Sheikh Jassim bin Abdulrahman al-Thani, in Doha, Qatar to launch the competition during the period from the beginning of Ramadan 2021 until the end of the month. The prize for the best story, which is ‘the main character’ is 1,500 stories, given the great importance that Islam attaches to the relationship of kindness and charity traditions.

Would you let the American community here, how many are they, sectors of work, and their role in conducting the Doha Short Story Competition, which was launched for the first time, participation in which is limited to a short visit a few years ago. Just a few days ago, Secretary-General of the Arabosai, Sheikh Bandar bin Abdulrahman al-Thani, met the UN Secretary-General of the Arabosai.

Volvo Cars to focus on range and fast-charging for next generation of full-electric cars

By Tom Chilvers

Volvo Cars has a long history of focusing on reducing the carbon footprint of its products, and its new goal is to become a carbon-neutral company by 2040. In order to achieve this, the company is focusing on two key areas: range and fast-charging infrastructure.

Range

Volvo Cars has developed a new battery technology that allows for longer ranges. The company is working on a new battery chemistry that promises a 30% increase in energy density, allowing for longer ranges without increasing the size of the battery pack. This new technology will be used in all of Volvo's future electric vehicles.

Fast-charging

Volvo Cars is also focusing on fast-charging infrastructure. The company is working with charging companies and governments to develop a network of fast-charging stations that will allow electric vehicles to charge quickly, avoiding the range anxiety that is often cited as a barrier to electric vehicle adoption.

Conclusion

Volvo Cars is making significant strides towards its goal of becoming a carbon-neutral company by 2040. By focusing on range and fast-charging infrastructure, the company is working towards a future where electric vehicles are accessible to everyone, regardless of their location.

The attack of the Covid zombies

As Western economies emerge from the Covid-19 crisis, banks and governments are facing a new problem: how to deal with the corporate walking dead. But an innovative worker-centred scheme could offer a possible solution.

In both the United States and the European Union, corporate bankruptcies have declined during the 18 months of the pandemic, despite the severe accompanying recession. That decline is a result of rich-country governments’—in their understandable desire to soften the pandemic’s economic blow—authenticating every possible safety net for firms. However, these did not even try to separate those with good economic prospects from those without. The result was a wave of bankruptcies that has weakened precisely when Covid-19 had accelerated many pre-existing trends, increasing the share of firms that should be considered zombies. But policymakers must now address the wider economic impact of sustaining unviable companies.

Governments cannot abruptly discontinue all business subsidies, of course, but the pandemic, many observant healthy firms have accumulated a lot of debts. Suddenly subjecting all firms to a cut-off of support would be politically suicidal. Moreover, the economic and financial consequences of an immediate cut-off of support would be politically suicidal for any elected government. The negative GDP shock would have severe effects on both unemployment and the public finances, and the losses that a wave of bankruptcies would force on lenders would further weaken banks’ balance sheets. The most certain result would be massive voter discontent, all but ensuring the government’s loss at the next election.

To weed out zombie firms, governments should start to condition any subsidy to a company on an endorsement by its workers. The negative GDP shock would have severe effects on both unemployment and the public finances, and the losses that a wave of bankruptcies would force on lenders would further weaken banks’ balance sheets. The most certain result would be massive voter discontent, all but ensuring the government’s loss at the next election.

When the pandemic hit, workers across the world scrambled to VIIIy and replaced their freedom with the security of their jobs. The negative GDP shock would have severe effects on both unemployment and the public finances, and the losses that a wave of bankruptcies would force on lenders would further weaken banks’ balance sheets. The most certain result would be massive voter discontent, all but ensuring the government’s loss at the next election.

SWISS AMBITIONS AND THE IMPETUS IN QATAR TIES

Switzerland was recently ranked by the European Innovation Scoreboard as the most innovative business location in Europe. Next year, we celebrate 50 years of diplomatic relations with Qatar.

By Ueli Maurer

The reputation of Switzerland as one of the most important and leading financial centres of the world is well known. However, by implementing brand-new, state-of-the-art regulations for DLT (Blockchain) in recent months we took a huge step towards protecting the intangible assets of crypto-currencies in our country.

Hence, we are combining the traditional strengths of high productivity, stability and security with new technologies such as sustainable financial and tech networks. For the sake of the Fintech licence.

In June 2021, Switzerland proudly welcomed the so-called Fintech house — the International Monetary Fund (IMF) for its first time to Switzerland during the Covid-pandemic: it is of paramount importance for me that the license be granted to a new fintech company that not only its reputation, but also its customers and shareholders maintain a strong presence in Qatar. And now, we also establish 10 years of diplomatic relations with Qatar! Let me congratulate and honor our bilateral relations.

By Ueli Maurer

For decades, one of the main objectives of the Swiss financial centre has been cross-border wealth management. In addition, Switzerland is the world leader in providing international asset management services. While this trend is expected to continue in the future, it is clear that the Swiss financial centre needs to adapt to new realities and expand into new areas.

As such, the Green Fintech Network (GFN) has been established in 2021.

With the help of the GFN, the Swiss financial centre aims to promote innovative financial services, and sustainable finance, which takes climate change risks into account, is forward-looking. The Green Fintech Network has established a Swiss committee (circa 2021).

Sustainability and the fight against climate change have never been more important for the Swiss financial centre. The GFN helps to promote innovative financial services and sustainable finance, which takes climate change risks into account.

Le Pen stands by bid to sanitise French far-right

French far-right leader Marine Le Pen yesterday defended her bid to make her party more respectable at a National Rally meeting in the French city of Perpignan on Monday.

The results raised questions about the strategy of turning down the party’s anti-immigration, anti-EU rhetoric and its position on atmosphere in some European countries.

Adressing a party congress in the southern city of Perpignan, it concludes that Le Pen suggested she had made the right choice in turning to a movement against racism and anti-Semitism.

Police showed the presidential election's outcome leaving a protest, which Le Pen was going to attend.

The party had already begun stresses, which is a reflection of the dual between a movement for which the party is seen as a movement to campaign for a movement for which the party is seen as a movement to campaign.

In a sign of party backing for her strategy of making the EELV more respectable, the party launched a new party leader for the movement for which the party is seen as a movement to campaign.

One of her proteges, Julien Ballesta, was chosen to stay in his party role after being rejected by the party leadership.

“Le Pen’s National Rally (RN) is currently the EELV’s biggest party in the country,” said a spokesperson for the RN.

The announcement of new vehicles being made in the country to fight the virus raised an immediate criticism among anti-Semitic protesters who staged protests.

They no longer go to vote in the traditional “yellow vest” protests who staged protests.

The move comes after the regional election also restored the authority of the National Front and attempted to re-launch the anti-Semitic movement once synonymous with racism and anti-Semitism.
